A PAYING COMMISSION.

No final statement has been made as to the cost of the Royal Commission of the Riddell-Latchford Timber Commission investigation which stretched over a period of two years, but, large as it may be, the total will assuredly fall below the aggregate already recovered for the Province as a direct result of the investigation work, without taking account of sums which should be secured in the future by the prosecution of actions against other companies named in the reports just made to the Government. The sums received either in cash or in security include:

$55,000 from Walter H. Russell, of Port Arthur.

$419,901,000 from the Shevlin Clarke Co., which will be increased to approximately $1,000,000 when all the timber upon the Quetico reserve berths is taken.

$13,030 received in settlement of claims from G. E. Farlinger.

In all, therefore, the Province has received $448,021, and has nearly $600,000 still to come, not one dollar of which would have been received by the Treasury had a change of Government not taken place.

WILTON.

Wilton Presbyterian church held their anniversary services on Sunday, June 25th. The beautiful little church has been re-decorated and has had the deico lights installed, and presented a very fine appearance. The church was very beautifully decorated with flowers for the occasion. The minister, Rev. A. L. Blacklock, was assisted at both services by Principal W. S. Dyde, of Queen's theological college, who preached two soul-stirring sermons to large congregations who were present both morning and evening. The music, under the able leadership of Mrs. Bernard Mills, was of a very high order. The attendance at the evening service was exceptionally large, chairs having to be used in the aisles. The collection from both services amounted to $115, which speaks well for the liberality of the farmers in that neighborhood.

On Monday evening last a lawn social was held on the church grounds, and was attended by people from the surrounding district. The programme consisted of bagpipe selections by Pipers Fraser and Logan of Kingston, and this music delighted the hearts of the Scotch people who were present. Others who took part in the programme were Charles Gates, of Queen's University; Miss Helen Munro, Miss Charles Cannon, Kingston; Miss Amey and Miss Elliott, Kingston; Rev. Gladstone Wood, Foxboro; Rev. A. L. Blacklock, and a very high class entertainment was put on and much enjoyed. The singers were accompanied by Mrs. Bernard Mills, of Wilton. From every point of view the event was a great success. The sum of $140 dollars was realized, all together the people are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts.

TYENDINAGA FARMER SHOT TO DEATH

HIRED MAN CAPTURED AFTER ALL-NIGHT CHASE

Wesley Mowat, prominent farmer of the seventh concession of Tyendinaga, was brutally murdered some time on Thursday, and his hired man, Maurice Barry, alias Pearson, is held under suspicion in connection with the crime.

Barry was captured at the edge of the bush near Long's, three miles north of Shannonville, about four miles from the scene of the tragedy at nine-thirty Friday morning by Ex-Warden Peter McLaren, assistant county road superintendent. McLaren was one of two hundred farmers who joined in the hunt all night for Barry along with officers of the Belleville Police Department, the Provincial Department, and Napanee police.

The body of Mowat was found shortly after midnight in his farm, the head being pierced by a bullet wound.

Barry is a handsome youth of seventeen, who might be taken for twenty. He is five feet eleven inches tall, and slight.

The disappearance of Wesley Mowat, one of the best known farmers in Tyendinaga, aroused the anxiety of Mrs. Mowat, his wife, in the evening. It is said that Mowat and Barry had been working in the barn on the Mowat farm Thursday. He did not return for supper, and it is alleged that Barry, in answer to a question of Mrs. Mowat as to the absence of her husband, replied that he had gone to a neighbor's. It was shown by the Wife Inquiry was made at some of the neighbors' and no trace of the unfortunate man could be found. A number decided to search about and see if there were any traces of him.

During the evening until near two o'clock in the morning the search continued and only ended with the gruesome discovery of the body of the farmer in the granary, covered over.

At once the Belleville and Napanee police were notified and the Provincial police were called in.

The wounds of the dead man were apparently bullet wounds. It looked at first as if a blunt instrument had struck the blows, as there was considerable swelling.

The post-mortem was held Friday afternoon at the home, after which the body was turned over to the relatives for burial.

As soon as word was received of the murder police officials hastened to the scene, those in the party being Inspector Francis J. Naphin, Sergeant D. T. Boyd, Provincial Officer Hughes, Plainclothes Officer J. M. Truesdell, Detector Exley, Chief F. W. Barrett, of Napanee, G. T. R. Officers P. Donovan and N. Maker and others.

The trail led towards Shannonville. The woods and side roads were drummed and the railroads were covered to be on the lookout, as it was felt that the man that was looked for was on his way to the front.

About six o'clock on Friday morning, it is said that a man resembling Barry applied at a farmers' house and asked to be taken to the station, that would be to Shannonville. The farmer said he would drive him there after he had finished milking. But the stranger said that would not do and he went along.

Mr. Peter McLaren left home about eight thirty to go to Belleville to be there at nine o'clock. When near the fourth concession he saw a man pass by the house near a farm house and Mr. McLaren asked the lady of the house if that could be the man. It was learned that he was, and Mr. McLaren and the man of the house went to the barn. The stranger was there and the two men spoke of the horses and cattle. The stranger was asked to stop but he went out and disappeared over the fence. It was felt that this was Barry.

The trail was followed and near an unused barn of Mr. Alex McLaren's, an uncle of Mr. McLaren, the latter and Mr. Goodman came upon Barry who had just come out of the barn. It is said that Barry exclaimed "that's right, Pete," although he had as far as Mr. McLaren knew, not known him. He was asked if he had any arms and he said no. That he might be searched he threw up his hands and came down, where they sat down on the with the two men to the edge of the grass at the side of the road. He had asked Mr. McLaren if his mother was near but Mr. McLaren said that it was not. They waited until the officers came up. When Chief Barrett and Provincial Constable Exley, of Napanee, came along Barry gave himself up and jumped into the car and was taken to Belleville by the officers.

There is some ninety-seven dollars missing from the Mowat home, but no money was found on Barry.

Inspector Naphin was busy all Friday afternoon collecting information in connection with the tragedy.

Barry belonged to a military unit according to a paper he carried on him. He looks some four or five years older than the age he gives.

DRURY IS CONVINCED THAT STRAIGHT PROHIBITION EXCELS.

"In my opinion government control of liquor is not anywhere near so successful as the temperance people were having in Ontario—straight prohibition," said Premier Drury on his return from a fortnight's sojourn in British Columbia, one of Canada's two "wet" provinces.

Very guardedly the premier discussed the subject, but as much, he said, from fear of doing injustice to the system of government control as from unwillingness to criticize the methods of the people of a sister province of the dominion. Whatever his opinion in vogue, it was what the people themselves had selected.

But Premier Drury was frank in saying that his information was that the system was subject to considerable abuse. It had not seemed to dispense with the beggers, nor had it completely eliminated drunkenness.

"From the standpoint of temperance," he added, "I feel that the system we have in Ontario is the better one. I come back more satisfied than I was before that straight prohibition is the better of the two policies."

THE "NEW NORTH"

A SPORTSMAN'S PARADISE

To men who spend their vacation fishing, hunting or canoeing, Canada is first among the countries of the world for the opportunities it affords for indulgence in either of these inviting, invigorating and exciting pastimes.

But there is one part of the Dominion which is particularly inviting to the sporting fisherman, the big game hunter or the canoeist. It is what is aptly termed Canada's "New North," reached via Cochrane, and comprehends that vast stretch of virgin country contiguous to the Canadian National Railways, Transcontinental Division extending across the upper part of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec for a distance of over a thousand miles, with Hudson Bay as its northern limit. To quote a traveller who knows it well : "It is a virgin country just as God made it."

To the sportsman this northern country is a veritable paradise. Within its vast forests there roam at will nearly all species of big game common to the North American continent. Of the big game family moose it is the home. Red deer have a wide range and in some sections are numerous, while caribou are to be had by the hunter who seeks them in their feeding grounds. In several districts bear are to be found, while the smaller fur bearing animals are common to a wide range of territory.

Disciples of Izaak Walton will find in the numerous rivers and lakes all that the most ardent of them can desire, both in regard to extent and variety of fish which abound in their waters. Lake, or grey trout, ranging in weight from six to twenty pounds, are common to several of the lakes. Waters in which speckled trout abound are easily accessible, although naturally the more remote the districts the better the sport. In some of the rivers and streams are to be caught speckled brook trout (known also as the square tail trout weighing from five to seven pounds. Good bass fishing is to be had in certain parts, and particularly in northwestern Quebec. One specie of fish which is common to some of the older parts of Canada not found in this far-northern country is the maskinonge. But in some of the waters flowing into James Bay are to be caught the lordly sturgeon, sportsmen having landed fish of this species ranging in weight all the way from twenty to two hundred pounds. In the waters contiguous to Hudson Bay excellent salmon fishing is occasionally experienced. Pike and pickerel are common to the waters of this northern wild.

To the canoist who seeks adventure in territory beyond the fringe of civilization the waters of the northern parts of Quebec and Ontario afford ideal facilities. Rivers, many of them mighty streams which for generations have served as highways to adventurers, fur-traders and trappers bound to and from Hudson Bay, are almost beyond compute in number, the country being grid-ironed by them. Wonderfully interesting canoe trips, either extended or limited, are available. For example the six routes to Moose Factory all of which find their way into Moose River about 30 miles south of Moose Factory on James Bay.

Until within recent years this great new north was inaccessible to those who had but a few weeks vacation at their disposal. It could not even be reached during an ordinary vacation term. Now, over the lines of the Canadian National Railways, the sporting fisherman, the hunter, the canoeist and holiday seekers in general can, occupying en route moderately appointed steel-constructed trains, reach points in this "Happy Hunting Land" in the course of a twenty-four hour journey from such centres as Toronto on the South, Montreal and New York, Chicago and Boston in approximately thirty-six hours.

And there is an interesting little booklet entitled "Where to Hunt, Fish and Paddle in the New North," obtainable from any office of the Canadian National Railways, which enables the holiday seeker to select his camping ground in this primeval paradise.

A number of sectional maps covering the sporting territory from west of Lake Nipigon to Western Quebec, in which are shown canoe routes and trails, will prove invaluable to the sportsman visiting the territory.

The Booklet also furnishes information regarding guides, outfit and other necessary detail.

"Have a Drink, Boys?"

Col. Cecil E. Morgan, well known throughout the province by his excellent work in connection with the Garden City Chamber of Commerce and the Royal Canadian Henley, has, during his lengthy and varied career spent in the four corners of the world, accumulated a rich and extensive hoard of anecdotes and stories of the first water which would literally make our affable and genial friend, George H. Hamm, of C.P.R. fame, turn green with envy.

Col. Morgan was at one time a member of the far-famed Northwest Mounted Police, in fact he was one of the early pioneers of that famous force, following amusing incident occurred while he and a fellow constable were on patrol. It was during the year 1887, shortly after Queen Victoria's Jubilee, when two lone Mounties cantered up to a small settlement in Southern Alberta. It was particularly noticeable that the men were conspicuous by their absence and upon investigation it was found that they had become possessed of a keg of whiskey, whereupon they had assembled in the bunkhouse and there they were found much the worse for their absorbency. Upon being interrogated regarding the why for of the festive occasion one cowpuncher not so drunk as the rest retorted, "Oh, it is a Jubilee."

"Jubilee," said the Mounties incredulously, for that term was by no means common in those days.

"Sure," returned the cowpuncher, "somebody has been doin' something for fifty d—— years. Have a drink, boys."

When Law Was Literary.

Do you know that when Mr. Bonar Law was young he had literary aspirations? He made this confession recently, when watching the tennis at Cannes, and said that he had once gone to the length of writing a short story. Apparently, it was not a very good short story—not good enough, at any rate, to satisfy the demands of the public.

"The editor sent it back," said Mr. Law sadly, "but he wrote that it showed promise."

"What was the plot?" someone asked.

Mr. Law has a good memory, but he could not remember that.

"I forget," he replied. "But I know there was a storm at sea and a girl."

Then the cynic chipped in.

"The storm at sea was unnecessary," he observed.

REV. HENRY K. COLEMAN ENTERS HOLY ORDERS

HIS GRANDFATHER AND FATHER, BOTH OF NAPANEE, ALSO ANGLICAN PRIESTS.

On Thursday, St. Peter's Day, a remarkable and somewhat unique event took place in St. Mary Magdalene church, when the Rev. Henry Kerr Coleman was admitted into the deaconate by the Bishop of Ontario, assisted by the neighboring clergy. The candidate for ordination is the only son of the Rev. John H. H. Coleman, M.A., vicar of Napanee, and also grandson of the Rev. A. H. Coleman, M.A., a well known and now retired clergyman of the diocese of Ottawa. Thus three generations of ministers in the same family were present, a rather singular circumstance, seldom occurring in any family, and much to the credit and training in the home of the Anglican priesthood.

The cloudy morning broke into a beautiful clear day by noon, adding glory to the solemn ordination service. The choir rendered special music and a large congregation attended. The clergy present were, besides the Bishop of Ontario, Rev. Canon W. F. Jones, Rev. Rural Dean McTear, Rev. Rural Dean Swayne, Rev. Thomas Leech, A. H. Creegan, C. E. S. Radcliffe, Rev. A. Pringle, and T. Branch, besides the father and grandfather of the ordained.

After the service, the Bishop and clergy were hospitably entertained to dinner at the Campbell House. It is understood that the Rev. Henry Ker Coleman will for the next two months be in charge of the vacant parish of Roslin, after which he will receive an other appointment from the Bishop. The late Venerable Archdeacon McMorine of St. James church, Kingston, was a grandfather of Rev. Mr. Coleman, and the Rev. Thomas Leech, Sydenham, is his god-father.

Rev. Henry Coleman should prove a valuable acquisition to the diocese, and his friends predict a bright and useful future for him, both on account of his family history and of his own achievements. After the war broke out, he gave up his position in a bank and enlisted to fight for his country, and shortly after his return home he decided not to resume his banking career but to devote his talents, energy and time to the work of the church. Accordingly he went over to the United States and took training for his life's work there.

HOW CHAUTAUQUA PLEASES

"HER OWN MONEY" ENJOYABLE AT CHAUTAUQUA

BEST PLAY WHICH HAS COME TO NIAGARA FALLS.

Niagara Falls Evening Review, of June 25th, states that this summer's play, "Her Own Money" is the best yet given and continues : "The Percival Vivian Players are well known in Niagara Falls, having come here the past four years with the Chautauqua and last night they gave the best yet. "Her Own Money" is full of opportunities for good acting and every member of the caste last night excellently played his and her part.

The play has a distinct message to many husbands and played up the fact that the average wife must ask for all the money she gets from her husband. Many touches of humor and laughable situations made the audience rock many times with laughter. The tent was packed to capacity with a very appreciative audience.

Arthur Berry who was here last year, and Miss Roberta Bellinger as the quarreling husband and wife, made many comical scenes and added to the gaiety of the play. Content Palcologue, as Mary Alden, had a difficult part and made the most of it. Virgil Le Oultone and Buford Armitage made a very fine team and lightened the sometimes pathetic scenes. J. Harry Irvine, as the husband, had a rather thankless part, but played it naturally and well. Will Riesfsall, as Toby, played the faithful servant to perfection.

Altogether the play was well up to the standard set by former players which have visited Niagara Falls with the Chautauqua.

Red Snow In America.

Last summer this phenomenon made its appearance in the Rocky Mountain National Park, to the wonder of tourists. The great masses of color present in the snow fields of the higher elevations are due to billions of tiny organisms, half plant, half animal, that have the power of movement, growth and reproduction. The organism is an Arctic species known as "Protococcus nivalis," and it has been found in Glacier and Mount Ranier National Parks only within the past decade. The color reaches its maximum density about a quarter of an inch below the surface of the snow; on the tongue, its flavor suggests watermelon. It is a mystery how the spore traversed such great distances, but it is supposed to have traveled on the Chinook winds.

The Pitcher Plant.

It has been found that the digestive agency of the insect-eating plant, Nepenthea, is sterile when taken aseptically from the unopened pitcher. But, according to "Nature," it becomes more effective after exposure to bacterial invasion. This septic condition, together with the enzymes contained in the bodies of the captured insects, are presumed to cause digestion.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

The early hours of Wednesday morning brought to a close one of the most useful sessions of parliament that has been held in many years, and one in which, incidentally, the government increased its stock by leaps and bounds. On the final vote of the session, the government had a majority of 125, while the Conservatives mustered a sorry 43 members behind their amendment, and also saw two of their members bolt to vote for the the government's measure to bring down freight rates.

Those who expected to see the King government beaten during the session early realized that they were doomed to disappointment. Instead of wavering, its strength increased until it is now in the position of being able to begin the next session with the situation well in hand. The effect of most of the tests of strength has been to show the weakness at present of the Conservatives in the House, and the failure of Mr. Meighen to attract any of the Progressives to his side of the fence.

The speech from the throne, reviewing the events of the session was delivered in the Senate by Sir Louis Davies, in the absence of Lord Byng. It referred in hopeful tones to the future and pointed out advantages which it was expected would accrue from legislation which had been passed. One of the important measures, of course, was that dealing with freight rates, which the Prime Minister has continued to look after himself and taken in hand when the report came in from the special committee dealing with the matters. Rt. Hon. Mr. King himself introduced the bill to bring the committee's report into effect and bring about the reduced rates and followed out the policy which he had laid down when the Crow's Nest Pass Agreement first came before the House. This policy in brief was that unless it could be clearly shown that it was not in the public interest to continue the suspension of the Crow agreement, that suspension would expire on July 6th. The railways were given their opportunity to convince the committee and the result is now well known. The Crow rates on grain and flour are to go back into effect and other commodities are to have the advantage of considerably reduced rates. There was objection to the report ; that was to be expected and the Conservatives moved to refer the whole matter to the Railway Commission. Their amendment found only 43 supporters, and one of them W. M. German, of Welland, with two Conservatives, and all the Progressives, voted against Sir Henry Drayton's amendment. The government was thus given the highest majority of the session, namely 125.

If anything were needed to show where the leadership of the Liberal Party lay, it came in that instance, and as a result the Prime Minister finds himself more solidly supported in his own party than ever before, and also a great deal more honored by the Progressives.

The agricultural industry of western Canada has much to thank Premier King for. The Canadian Wheat Board in which, apparently, the majority of western grain growers place much faith was given support by the government and the measure for its creation went through the House with few dissensions. The government, in accepting the measure as drawn up by the committee, held out for one or two safeguards, for the rest of the country, which were inserted without weakening the other clauses of the bill, and the result appears to be highly pleasing to the west. At the same time, provision has been made for the better marketing of grain and other farm products, extension of cold storage facilities and research work to assist the farmers of the Dominion.

The returned soldiers and dependents of those who did not return were looked after by special pensions and re-establishment committee which recommended amendments to the Pensions Act and also measures affecting the returned men, to make their lot better.

Economy in some of the government departments was brought about by the amalgation of the defence forces of the country under one head, and a reduction in staff and expense of administration has already resulted.

The women of the dominion who are entitled to vote have been looked after by amendment of the Election Act, and as a consequence many thousands have been able to secure their right to the franchise. Other amendments to the Act also take care of those who by election were debarred by technicalities from voting.

Unemployment is to be the subject of a conference between federal and provincial officials during the next couple of months and this will be worked out to keep the wheels of industry turning as far as possible during the coming winter months.

One or two bills proposed were blocked by the Conservative majority in the Senate, where Mr. Meighen was able to make up for his weakness in the lower chamber, but all of the important measures went through.

Generally the session just closed is regarded as having been most useful. At first glance it would seem that a government with an actual majority of but one could not possibly carry on, but under the conditions which have prevailed in the Commons, where the Progressives showed a willingness to assist rather than block the government's attempt to carry out necessary reforms, it has been shown that a government can start under difficulties and finish a session with much greater strength.

There is no fear of anything, less of the old-time party squabbling and more attention to real business. The new Prime Minister was able to institute a few needed reforms such as bringing down the Auditor General's report and the estimates earlier than usual, and he was also able to keep the House plugging away at its work, and at the same time without trying to drive the members night and day. Except when there was important business on hand which required to be finished that night, the House seldom sat after eleven o'clock, and the result was a much better spirit for work among the members. And also, of course, the government kept free of morning sittings, and the whole House benefitted.

Looking back over the first session of the three-party House, it must be admitted that there has been little fault to find. The new men have applied themselves generally to the tasks before them, and they have added considerably to the debating average of the Commons Chamber. Under the government's policy, parliament has been consulted as to matters affecting the public and the government has been guided thereby, instead of the government bringing down a measure and forcing it down the members' throats. The result would seem to be better legislation. There are those of course, who look to a return to the straight two-party system, with each party working along a well-defined line, but even if that should come, as it may do, there will probably be some of the better features of the present system injected into it.

The government will meet the House again about January next and one of the important measures next year will be the redistribution bill. That, and the expected further tariff revision, together with other legislative changes to be worked out during the recess will provide plenty of interest for the country, and it is to be hoped before such time arrives, the government will have increased its strength further for it has a great many more friends to-day than it had when the last session opened.

Why Do Birds' Eggs Differ In Color?

To afford them protection. A clutch of eggs laid on the ground. Eggs laid among stones of stone color, and so on.

How the eggs are colored just to the right tint is still a matter to be settled—although we know that pigments in the make-up of the parent bird affect the color of the egg. It may be that centuries of ceaseless struggle for race preservation has produced certain attributes in the parent bird, or it may be that the power of coloring the eggs is simply the gift to the bird by nature. But there the fact stands, one of the greatest wonders of a wonderful world.

WHO WAS BROWN?

Identity of Man Who Witnessed the Death of Gen. Wolfe.

Who was the Brown that was present at the death of Gen. Wolfe at Quebec? This is a question which the Marquis of Sligo, of County Mayo, Ireland, has set himself to answer in "Some Notes About the Death of Wolfe," which he has sent to Dr. George H. Locke, Chief Librarian of Toronto, together with a key to the famous painting, "The Death of Wolfe," by Benjamin West, now in the National Gallery at Ottawa.

His lordship states that claims have been made for four different "Browns" or "Brownes," who are said to have attended Wolfe in his dying moments. These are as follows:

Arthur Browne, or Browne, of the 28th Foot.

Henry Brown, or Browne, of the Louisburgh Grenadiers.

Arthur Brown, or Browne, Firework er of Artillery.

Henry Brown, or Browne, in one of the "American" battalions (since formed into the 60th Rifles).

As a result of his researches, the marquis has come to the conclusion that the first Arthur Brown on the above list is not the man referred to by Knox in his "Journal." "For many years I did think so," says the marquis; "in the early 70's my eldest uncle, discussing the engraving of Wolfe's picture, said: 'That man carrying the colors is an ancestor of ours'."

Subsequently a letter was discovered which showed that, while Arthur was at the battle of Quebec, he was with his regiment farther down the line, and it was his brother Henry who attended at the death of the general.

In a letter from Henry to his father, John Browne of Westport, dated Louisburgh, November 17, 1759, the following occurs: "I was the person who carried Gen. Wolfe off the field. He was wounded as he stood within a foot of me."

Dealing with the two other claimants, the marquis says that if the Arthur Brown third on the above list was present at the death of Wolfe, he must have been sent over from the other side of the St. Lawrence river on a message to Wolfe. This Arthur Brown subsequently became Governor of Charleston and Kinsale, was married twice, and had 21 children. He made a definite statement that he was present when the general received his mortal wound, and the marquis concludes that this 'must be the "Arthur Browne" so often mentioned.

As for the last Brown on the list, the marquis says he appears in a list of officers of the 60th Foot in 1763, but nothing further is known of him.

Knox, in his "Journal," explicitly states that there were only four who, in the heat and turmoil of action, actually witnessed the fall of Wolfe—and it is scarcely likely that these four persons should each bear the name of Brown!

Fighting Germs.

In the great realm of nature every creature preys upon its fellows. Even microbes, the tiniest living things that the most powerful microscope enables us to see, are, for their size, as voracious as the most savage lions.

And now comes an amazing discovery made at the famous Pasteur Institute in Paris. Microbes themselves are attacked, weakened, and finally killed by creatures so vastly smaller than their own minute bodies that we can never hope to see them, however much the microscope is developed.

These creatures—ultra-microbes—can be isolated, bred, and strengthened until they are ready to fall like an avenging host upon the germs of disease. Once research has enabled us to enlist as allies the teeming battalions of these tiny friends, we shall be able to wage a relentless war on sickness.

When, for instance, we are able to turn loose the ultra-microbe of typhoid fever into suspected water supplies, one of our worst scourges will become a thing of the past.

Crabs as Surgeons.

The surrender of limbs is common among crustaceans and crabs. When the limb is seized or when it is damaged by the fall of a stone the crab breaks it off near the base.

There is a particular line of weakness—the breakage plane. The surrender is brought about by the forcible contraction of muscles at the base of the limb and the snap is over in an instant.

Nearest of all is an arrangement inside the base of the leg whereby a bandaging membrane with two flaps closes up the wound and prevents bleeding.

Inside the crab's bandaging membrane a new leg is formed in miniature, and after a time, when the crab moults its husk, this new leg shoots out like a jack-in-the-box and soon hardens.

Church Built In a Day.

Rome was not built in a day, but then Rome was very much behind the times.

On the outskirts of Chicago a feat that would have astonished the Romans has been performed, and it sounds a little startling even in cars.

A contract was signed on a Friday for the building of a church. The document stipulated that the church should be ready for dedication on the Sunday following.

Just one clear day was left for the putting up of a building which was to hold about three thousand people.

At dawn on the Saturday morning the workmen started, and at seven o'clock that evening the men were putting in windows, doors, and electric light.

No floor was laid, but by midnight all else was done and the dedication services were held the following day.

MANITOBA OF OLD.

George Ham Tells Anecdotes About the West.

There was keen competition between two lines of steamboats running from Moorhead to Winnipeg. One night a boat belonging to line A ran into a steamer owned by line B.

"I was unceremoniously thrown out of my berth," writes Mr. Ham, "and rushed to the cabin. One scared fellow-passenger loudly shouted that the boat was sinking, and just then the mate came along, and, hitting him a wallop on the ear, said: 'You're a dom liar. It's the other boat that's sinking.'"

This story is told by Mr. George Ham, who tells other good yarns in his "Reminiscences of a Raconteur."

The City Council of Winnipeg, he writes, was an attraction to many citizens in the early days and spirited encounters were frequent and popular.

"At one meeting, Ald. Frank Cornish called Ald. Alloway a puppy, and when asked by the mayor to apologize, did so by saying that he (even he) came to think of it, his brother alderman was not a puppy, but a full-grown dog. This did not meet with the approval of his worship, whereupon Ald. Cornish very humbly and genitently apologized to the entire canine race."

"It was said of Mr. Cornish that when he was Mayor of Winnipeg—he was the first—he hauled himself up before himself on a charge of being, well, let's say not to sober, and fined himself five dollars and costs. The attendants at the police court loudly applauded this Spartan act, until they gained the harpor and, addressing himself, 'Cornish, is this your first offence?' and the culprit Cornish blandly informed Mayor Cornish that it was. Then his worship, addressing himself to himself, said: 'Well, if it's your first offence, Cornish, I'll remit your fine.' And the laughter was resumed."

"Col. W. N. Kennedy was Mayor of Winnipeg when the city bought its first piano. People unskilled said that the instrument was an old one belonging to the mayor, which he had palmed off on the city. Of course, there was not a word of truth in the report. At a concert Miss Chambers, a niece of Col. Kennedy, was playing, when one of the mayor's detractors who sat beside me said in a stage whisper:—

"'There, doesn't that prove that's the mayor's old piano? How would his niece know where to put her fingers so well unless she had played on it before?'"

There are some good stories of Sir Matthew Begbie's court in Cariboo in the early "seventies. Two partners in the ownership of a mining claim quarreled, and then had a dispute over the division of their ground. After listening to a lot of tall swearing and contradictory evidence, Judge Begbie stopped the trial and said:

"You, Jones and Brown, are agreed that you want to divide this ground?"

"Yes, sir."

"But you can't agree on how the lines are to be run?"

"No, sir."

"Very well, Jones, you go out to the ground and run a line dividing it the way you think it should be divided."

"Yes, sir," responded the exultant Jones.

"And Brown."

"Yes, sir."

"To-morrow you can go and take your choice of the two halves, as Jones divided it."

"Probably," adds Mr. Ham, "not since the days of Solomon has a legal dispute been more equitably or effectively settled than that by Judge Begbie — an Englishman just out from the Old Country, in a wild frontier mining camp."

On another occasion Judge Begbie had convicted and fined a malefactor $200.

"That's dead easy," flippantly said the culprit. "I've got it right here in my hip pocket."

"——and six months in jail. Have you got that in your hip pocket, too?" came the ready amendment to the sentence.

Here is a story told of Mr. Ham by a friend. An American colonel had just received a cheque for $18,000 from Pierpont Morgan. He showed the cheque to Mr. Ham, and the latter asked if he might tear a small piece off the corner. When the colonel inquired what for, Ham said: "Well, if the whole bit of paper is worth $15,000, a small piece of it must surely be worth a few thousands—and I need the money."

Emigration Howlers.

Here are some "gems" discovered at the Salvation Army emigration office.

An official, unaware of the sex of an applicant, scanned a widow's application form to a widower. He replied: "I did not make it clear in my former letter, and regret to say that it was not me who died; it was their mother."

To the question, "Date of husband's death," a "widow" replied, "Two years — whereabouts not known."

The Government forms include a question to insure linguistic ability, and a homely soul declared that "the requirements in this regard" were, other than English, "One tin trunk and a suit case."

Insurance risks are so many emigrants a great difficulty. "I am writing to ask you how much it would cost to insure my husband's life on my grandchildren during their voyage to Canada," wrote a fond guardian.

But for an instance of simple, unsophisticated trust in human nature, the following would be hard to beat: "Shall I fasten the keys outside my trunk so that the customs officer will be able to inspect my things?"

The Easter Lily.

The Easter lily is a comparatively new thing in Christendom. It was introduced from Japan about fifty years ago.

CANADA'S POPULATION

HOW LATEST CENSUS WILL AFFECT THE COMMONS.

There Will Be More Members From Four Provinces West of the Great Lakes, and Nova Scotia and Ontario Will Drop One M. P. Each—Some Figures and Comparisons.

Interesting political developments are bound to result at the first election held in Canada following the Redistribution bill. The Redistribution bill follows upon the announcement of the Dominion's population made by the Dominion Statistician, which shows that the Dominion has grown from 7,206,643 persons in 1911, to 8,788,489 at present—an increase of 1,562,846.

That Canada's population is steadily progressing and moving in a westerly direction is evidenced by the totals shown in the accompanying table, which compares the population of each province in 1921 with that of the census of 1911. The rate of growth is not so great as between 1901 and 1911, when the increase was from 5,371,315 to 7,206,643. It is, however, much greater than that which prevailed from 1871, following confederation, to 1901, when an increase of less than 1,500,000 was made in thirty years. From confederation to the present time the growth has been more than 5,000,000.

The announcement of the census returns makes it possible to forecast with considerable accuracy the representation in the House of Commons, to which the various provinces of Canada will be entitled under the redistribution legislation. By the British North America Act the representation of Quebec is fixed at 65 members, and the ratio of that number to the total population of the province is the unit which determines the representation of the other provinces in the Commons.

Quebec's population has risen from 2,003,232 in 1911 to 2,349,067 at the present time—an increase of 345,835. The unit of population for determining the representation of the other provinces has consequently risen from 30,858 in 1911 to 36,100, and a small fraction at the present time. The representation of a province will be reached, therefore, by dividing this number into its population.

Ontario, with a population estimated at 2,929,054, is therefore entitled to 81 representatives in the next Parliament, as compared with 82 at the present time and 86 in the period from 1908 to 1917. Nova Scotia, with a population of 523,837, will have fifteen members in the next Parliament, as compared with 16 at the present time and 18 in 1908. New Brunswick, whose population is 387,829, is entitled to eleven members as at present. It had 13 representatives in 1908.

But it is in the western provinces where the changes in representation will be most marked. Particularly will this be the case in the prairie provinces — Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan. Manitoba, with a population of 613,008, as compared with 455,614 in 1911, should have seventeen seats at the next election. It now has 15 representatives in Parliament, as compared with 10 in 1908. Alberta, with its 581,295 population, is entitled to 16 members under the Redistribution Act, as compared with the 12 members it now has and the seven in 1903. Saskatchewan, with its large relative increase from 492,432 in 1911 to its present population of 761,390, is entitled to 21 members, as against 16 in the present House.

British Columbia, the population of which was 392,480 in 1911, has grown to 523,353, and gains a representation of 14, as against 13 members. There is a possibility that a final revision of figures will give this province another member. The Yukon Territory may lose its representation entirely following the redistribution. Its population, according to the recent census, was only 4,162 as compared with 8,512 in 1911 and 27,210 in 1901—figures which in themselves are eloquent of an ebbing tide from the great gold rush days.

According to its population, which now stands at 88,615 as compared with 93,728 in 1911, the province of Prince Edward Island would be entitled to not more than three members. However, an amendment to the Representation Act, passed by several sessions ago, provided that the representation of a province in the House of Commons should not fall below its representation in the Senate. Consequently the little province of Prince Edward Island will continue to retain its four members in the representative assembly, notwithstanding its fallen population.

Changes In Representation.

Province.	Next House.	Present House.
Quebec	65	65
Nova Scotia	13	16
New Brunswick	11	11
Prince Edward Island	4	4
Ontario	81	82
Manitoba	15	15
Saskatchewan	21	16
Alberta	16	12
British Columbia	14	13
Yukon	1	1
Total	245	235

It will be seen from these figures that while the representation in the west will be increased, that of the east will be almost unchanged.

EXCAVATIONS AT MYCENAE.

Important British Discoveries In Ancient Greek City.

Some very interesting discoveries have been made by the British School of Archaeology in its recent work at Mycenae, the ancient Greek city, which already has yielded some of the most remarkable finds bearing on the epic period which preceded the dawn of authentic history.

One of these discoveries is of a tank bath in the palace of the Acropolis at Mycenae, which suggests the possibility that it may have been the legendary bath of Agamemnon, in which he is reputed to have been murdered by his wife, Clytemnestra.

At all events, if Agamemnon were a historical person, he should have lived in this palace, for it was built about 1,400 years B.C., and was destroyed before the end of the twelfth century, B.C.

Mycenae was one of the most important cities of ancient Greece, and was the fabled seat of Agamemnon, son of the king of that city, and most powerful ruler in Greece. It was Agamemnon whom the Greek historians credit with having led the Greek expedition against Troy.

On his return from that expedition he was slain. In the tragedy of Aschylus the scene of the murder is laid in the palace of Agamemnon at Argos, some miles distant from Mycenae.

The bath uncovered by British investigators is lined with red stucco, and its sides are composed of steps.

The palace, which was discovered in 1886, has now been completely cleared. One of the most interesting parts of it is the great hall, or Megaron, in which is a raised ceremonial circular hearth made of painted stucco and having floors of the same material edged with slabs of gypsum.

The walls of the hall were covered with painted fresco, which suffered much in the fire which destroyed the palace. Some fragments of these decorations were found. They represent elaborately dressed women with auburn hair.

The domestic quarters of the palace were much destroyed, but in them were found a row of jars and a shrine with the remains of painted stucco altars.

Under the floors of the palace have been found scanty remains of a yet earlier edifice, dating probably from 1,600 to 1,400 B.C. There probably lived the kings who were found by Schlieman in 1876 buried with their treasures in the famous shaft graves of Mycenae.

Below this again are the tombs of still earlier periods, going back to about 2,000 B.C.

In addition, the British archaeologists found several new chamber tombs in the Mycenae cemeteries. The two largest tombs just discovered have not yet been cleared. In the entrance to one were found painted vases, gold and amethyst beads, and five spleadid intaglio seal stones.

On two of these are standing lions and the figure of the great mother goddess dressed in the elaborately flounced and gathered gown worn by Mycenaen women. Above her head is her secret symbol, the double ax.

One of these big tombs has an entrance passage nearly 100 feet long and 20 feet wide, and is sunk 30 feet below the level of the ground. It is hoped that they contain articles of great historic value.

An Old Man.

The death of Peter Ferguson, the oldest person in New Brunswick, occurred on April 30. Deceased was in his 110th year, having been born at Summerside, P.E.I., on April 1st, 1813. Working in the open air, he was remarkably strong and healthy, never being ill until his health broke down only two years ago.

THE NEW SPEAKER.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux Now First Commoner of Canada.

Gaelic grace, and poise befitting an Anglo-Saxon, are united in the bearing of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, now the First Commoner of Canada. A first comment might be that the House of Commons loses an orator for the purpose of making a chairman, for the new Speaker is brilliant in both languages. If he lived in the United States he might be called a spellbinder, so imposing are his sentences, so rounded his periods. Almost any felicitous occasion in which he took part would be remembered mainly because of his speech, for it would be fervid, eloquent and impressive.

Few men in Canada would earn those adjectives for a platform or post-prandial effort. This would be true of Mr. Lemieux, whether he spoke in English or in French, in Halifax, Montreal, Victoria, or Tokio. The addition of the Japanese capital to this list is made because of Mr. Lemieux's success as a special envoy to Japan for the Canadian Government in 1907, when he negotiated the delicate agreement by which Japanese emigration to Canada has been restricted ever since. The "grand manner" of the new Speaker, in which he resembles his former chief and friend: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, has shone in other capitals, for he has represented the Canadian Government on missions to London and Paris, and in American cities, in the past. There is another resemblance to Sir Wilfrid in that Mr. Lemieux is a lover and master of the best in English literature, and has a rich admiration for the British character and constitution. His political heroes are said to be Gladstone, Peel, O'Connell and Bright.

Not the least interesting phase of the elevation of Mr. Lemieux to the Speakership is the whirligig effect of his relationship to the Prime Minister. The Lemieux Act for the settlement of labor disputes, and which bears his name because he was Post master-General and Minister of Labor when it was passed, was largely the work of Mackenzie King, then the young Deputy Minister of Labor, and subordinate of the present Speaker. Mr. King, having now reached the Premiership, designates his former chief to preside over the House of Commons.

A WOMAN'S WORK IS NEVER DONE

It Seems So in Many Cases and Good Health is Always Necessary

Viscount, Saskatchewan.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness of the female organs. I had pains in the back and bearing-down pains in the abdomen and was in a general run-down condition. I could not sleep, rest or work and was quite unfit to do even slight household tasks. A friend told me about your Vegetable Compound and I in my turn truly recommend it, as my severe symptoms vanished and I am better in every way. I do my own work, look after my children and see to chickens, cow and my garden. I also recommend it for young girls who are weak and run down, as my 16-year-old daughter has taken it and is quite her own my self again."—Mrs. Fred. Wiley, Viscount, Saskatchewan.

I Live On A Farm

Upper New Horton, N. B.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines and they have done me a world of good. Since then I have been able to do my housework and I have a lot of work to do as I live on a farm. Seeing your advertisement in the papers was what made me think of writing to you. I hope this will help someone else."—Mrs. Wm. B. Knivel, Upper New Horton, New Brunswick.

Wealthy Montreal.

Over five million dollars was the total for income tax registered at the Montreal Tax Office this year. The total is about equal to that received last year and makes Montreal the greater centre of income tax collection in the Dominion. There was a tremendous rush on the last day for paying taxes, and it is estimated that over $2,000,000 were paid in on that day. Many cheques came in by mail and bushel baskets had to be used to carry them. People came in to the last minute asking how returns should be made out, and these people included even judges of the Superior Court.

Burned Forests Pay No Wages.

Living forests provide us with wood material of all kinds for our homes and industries, but burned forests provide no lumber, no work for the workingman, no business for the merchant and no freight for the railway or steamship. Most of the land on which our Canadian forests now stand is not fit for agriculture, but it is fit to grow fine crops of trees to keep our sawmills, our wagon factories, our furniture factories and our paper mills running at full force forever. Let us all take part in protecting our valuable forests.

Rose Tea.

On Thursday afternoon, Mrs. George Cliff, Mrs. D. B. Wilson and their committee, gave a Rose Tea at Mrs. Cliff's home, for the Ladies' Aid Society, of Trinity Church. Mrs. W. F. Hall, the beloved President, and Mrs. D. Scott, of Montreal, received with the Hostesses. The house was decorated entirely with roses, many kind neighbors sending donations for the Sale Table. Mrs. A. C. Baker asked the friends to the dining-room. The tea-table was lovelinessitself with its handsome Mexican centre and large cut glass basket of crimson American beauties and at each corner a small basket of tiny rose-buds. Mrs. Finkle and Mrs. John Fraser poured tea, assisted by Mrs. Fraser Holland, Mrs. E. Smith and Mrs. H. Huffman and the Misses S. Shorey, M. Carscallen and M. Creighton. Music and readings added much to the enjoyment of the afternoon. Mrs. Smith sang very sweetly; Miss Kathleen Wilson, of Strathcona, pleased the guests with a musical recitation, Miss Ila Hambly playing a delightful accompaniment. Little Betty Holland surprised everyone with her recitation, "The French Doll," completely forgetting her audience she gave her selection in a manner that would have done credit to a much older reader. We predict a future for this coming little artiste. Mrs. G. Hambly and Mrs. Bates, who had charge of the funds, reported a splendid sum for the Committees.

Death of Mrs. Edward Uens.

The many friends of Beatrice Arwilda, beloved wife of Mr. Edward Uens, will learn with deep sorrow of her death which sad evnt occurred at the family residence on Mill street Sunday morning. Deceased had been in poor health since early last fall, but had only been confined to her bed since Tuesday. On Monday evening she suffered a chill which developed pleurisy, followed by pneumonia, and despite the best of medical attention, and all the loving and tender care of relatives she passed away in the early hours of the Sabbath day. The late Mrs. Uens was highly respected in the community in which she resided, and by her kindly disposition and many neighborly qualities endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact. Besides her sorrowing husband she also leaves a family of four small children, three sons and one daughter, the oldest a boy of about eleven years of age. Deceased was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob R. Moore, who are residents of Manson, Manitoba. One brother, Mr. William Moore, who lives with his parents, and one sister, Mrs. Davy, of Saskatchewan, also survive. To the sorrowing and heart-broken husband and little family and relatives is extended the deepest sympathy of a host of friends. The funeral took place this Tuesday afternoon at 2 p.m. Services were conducted in Grace Methodist church by her pastor, Rev. A. J. Terrill, after which the remains were interred in the family plot in Riverview cemetery.

HISTORIC TUG SUNK.

Six Lives Were Lost When "Spray" Went Down.

MONTREAL, July 3.—In a collision with the Cairn-Thomson liner Cairnrhu in the early hours of Saturday morning, which occurred off Lanoraie, about six miles west of Sorel, the tug Spray was sent to the bottom of the St. Lawrence, carrying with her five men and a woman, the cook of the tug, who were caught asleep in their cabins at the moment of the disaster.

The victims are: Mrs. Bruneau, of Sorel, 25, the cook; Philippe Moreau, 35, St. Aaas de Sorel, married, and leaves a wife and three children; O. Geneau, 26, of St. Anne de Sorel; F. Compclanad, St. Joseph de Sorel; J. B. Desroaiers, 17, of Lanoraie, and Pilot Houde, who was acting at the time of the collision and who was swept off the vessel.

The following statement has been given out by the Robert Reford Company, who are the agents for the Cairn-Thomson Line:

"The S. S. Cairnrhu, proceeding up the river above Sorel at 2 a.m. Saturday, was run into by the Spray, of the Vincennes-McNaughton Line, going down the river with a tow of barges. The tug collided with the Cairndhu, turned over and sank. The Cairndhu left Leith, Scotland, with a cargo of soft coal for Canada. She usually makes the outward trip in 11 days, but owing to the bad weather took six more days this trip."

Captain Demers, Dominion Wreck Commissioner, will, it is expected, open an inquiry into the collision here on Monday.

An international interest attaches to the tug Spray in that it was in this vessel that the two prominent United States politicians and contractors, Gaynor and Greene, were kidnapped from Quebec to Montreal at a time when they were undergoing extradition proceedings on charges of swindling the State Government of Georgia.

The Spray was also used in connection with the transfer of Dr. Crippen, the wife-murderer, from the Quebec jail to the ocean steamer that took him back to trial in England.

JASPER PARK LODGE

AN IDEAL STOP-OFF POINT

With the advent of reduced fares to Alberta and British Columbia points, many who have long anticipated seeing the Canadian Rockies and Pacific Coast will make the journey this year. To them, and to the individual traveling "Across Canada" for purely business reasons, the "National Way" and the Canadian National Railways' premier trains, the "Continental Limited" and the "National" appeal most strongly, the route connecting as it does the great business centres of Canada, and traversing regions of outstanding interest. The various Canadian National hosteries en route suggest excellent stop-off points and are noted for the excellence of their service. To their number is added this year Jasper Park Lodge on Lac Beauvet.

Jasper Park, Alberta, in the Canadian Rockies, is the largest of Canada's National Parks, its area of 4,400 square miles offering unlimited holiday possibilities to the Tourist and Sportsman. Dolley Varden trout lurk in the clear pure mountain streams. Beautiful transparent lakes mirror the encircling mountains, and a new unspoiled Alpine wonderland of snow-crowned peaks and verdant valleys gladdens the eye. In this delightful setting on Lac Beauvert, three miles from Jasper Station (with which it is connected by motor car service), is Jasper Park Lodge, operated by the Canadian National Railways' Hotel Department, and now open for the reception of guests.

Of artistic log construction, the Lodge comprises a large, comfortable Lounge building, surrounded by Dining Hall and separate Sleeping buildings, each containing sitting-room and four bedrooms, electric lighted, with all modern conveniences, running water in each room, baths, etc. In conjunction with the Lodge is a Dancing Pavilion where good music assures to the guests delightful evening diversion.

From the Lodge a magnificent panorama greets the eye. Mount Edith Cavell, so-called in memory of the martyred British Red Cross Nurse, stands out in bold relief, its glinting slopes making it to appear as "a sheet suspended from the heavens." The picturesque valley of the Athabaska is flanked by Pyramid Mountain, the richness of its varied color effects presenting a very striking contrast. Whistelers Mountain, Colon Range, Roche Bonhomme, are but a few of the mighty peaks that meet the gaze. Riding is, of course the popular pastime and ponies are available for this exhilarating sport. Within easy reach of the Lodge, afoot or by motor car, are numerous points of interest. Maligne Canon and Gorge, one of the most interesting attractions in the Park, is but six miles distant. Easily accessible streams will tempt the fisherman. The amateur photographer will revel in Nature's bounteousness. Animal, bird and plant life is found in wonderful variety. Seventy different species of birds, seven hundred different species of plants and flowers have been accounted for, and within the confines of the Park which is a bird and game preserve) are big horn mountain sheep and goat; bear-cinnamon, brown and black; caribou and moose, elk, beaver, otter, marten and deer.

For those more venturesome, who would explore the more difficult and extended trails, guides, ponies, pack-horses and complete outfits can be obtained at the Lodge, from which point also parties set out on hunting expeditions beyond the confines of the Park.

This delightful region is fully described in a new booklet entitled "Jasper Park Lodge," copies of which may be obtained from the nearest Canadian National or Grand Trunk Agent.

"Pussyfoot" Is Busy.

LIVERPOOL, July 3.—William E. Johnson, or as the English press insist upon calling him, "Pussyfoot," invaded England Sunday and began immediately to organize what he termed a world convention against alcoholism, which is to be held at Toronto in the week beginning November 19.

The United States reformer told the British newspapers that he expected England to go dry in ten years and the world in fifteen. He declared that the economic burdens of the European nations, which are so overwhelming that they had to unload something, and that something was alcohol. "I refused to sail in an American ship," he indignantly informed interviewers, "because of the hypocrisy of my Government in pronouncing the sale of liquors on American vessels. I prefer the honesty of the British ship, where I could see my countrymen procuring the smoking room and drinking what they liked without deceit."

FREDERICTON, N.B., July 3.—This city was shaken by what appeared to be an earthquake at 8.25 p.m. Sunday (Atlantic standard time). Dishes rattled on shelves and in some cases doors were thrown open and people rushed into the streets.

There was only one shock and no actual damage appears to have been done.

HITTING AT CANADA.

U. S. Government Continues to Increase Its Tariff.

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 3.—By a vote of 38 to 12 the Senate approved on Saturday a tariff of 30 cents a bushel on wheat. Democratic leaders declared during the debate which preceded the vote that this rate would cost the American people $100,000,000.

Senator McComber, Republican, North Dakota, in charge of the measure, stating frankly the purpose of the rate was to keep above the world level the price of spring wheat from Dakotas and Minnesota, said he did not think the tariff proposed would be carried on to the consumer, but even if it was it would not amount to $2 a year.

With little discussion the Senate approved a committee rate of 30 cents a bushel on apples, an increase of five cents over the House rate. Also it approved a new amendment proposing a rate of half a cent a pound on apricots, green, ripe or in brine, and a duty of 40 cents an ulorem on apricots otherwise prepared.

Increases in duties on fruits were voted by the Senate in rapid succession. Rates approved included:—

Berries—Edible in natural condition, 1¼ c a pound. House rate one cent; prepared or preserved, 35 per cent. ad valorem. House rate 20 per cent.

Cherries—In natural state or in brine, two cents per pound, House rate 1½ cents; maraschino cherries and cherries prepared or preserved, 45 per cent. ad valorem, an increase of 5 per cent over the original rate and 25 per cent. over the House duty.

Peaches or pears—Ripe or in brine, half a cent a pound. House rate same; dried or evaporated, two cents per pound, House rate 1 per cent.; otherwise prepared, 40 per cent. ad valorem, original rate 35 per cent., House rate 20 per cent.

Prunes and plums—Green, ripe or in brine ½ cent pound, House rate same; otherwise prepared or preserved, 40 per cent. original rate 35 per cent., House rate 20 percent.

All jellies, jams, marmalades and fruit butters, 40 per cent., original 30, House 28; fruits in any form not specially provided for, 40 per cent., original rate 35, House rate 20.

NEWSPAPERMAN DROWNED.

One of the Editors of Ottawa Journal Loses His Life.

OTTAWA, July 3.—Sidney Irving Macklin, a member of the Journal staff, was drowned on Saturday evening about 5.30 at Woodroffe, near Ottawa. The deceased young man, with friends who could not swim, had gone in bathing, and Macklin, who learned to swim only in May, swam out a boom some 200 yards from shore. He reached his objective, and after a brief rest started back to shore. When a third of the way had been covered he was heard to shout for help, and his friends could see him making a struggle to keep afloat. Mr. W. Whitten rushed out a boat, but it was useless, as he had no oars.

Assistance arrived in a few minutes, and James and Jack Patrick dived continuously into 25 feet of water where Macklin was last seen, but failed to find the body. Sunday evening it was located by B. Boulton, the city diver, caught between two logs chained together. The family of the deceased, at Milliken, Ont., were notified, and two brothers arrived from Man., and two of the occupants were were taken to Milliken by his brothers.

Mr. Macklin was the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. William Macklin of Milliken, and was 21 years of age. He was educated at Markham High School, and, after graduating, he joined the staff of the Toronto Star. A year later he transferred to the World.

Two years ago Mr. Macklin left for Ottawa to take a position on the Ottawa Valley Farm Journal, and shortly afterward joined the staff of the Evening Journal.

REBELS DO NOT FIGHT

End of Civil War in Dublin a Matter of Hours.

Republicans In Ireland Cannot Face Fire of Free State Troops, and Are More Timid Than When They Are Murdering Unarmed Civilians —White Flag and White Feather Freely Displayed.

DUBLIN, July 3.—The National troops were victorious in the battle in Dublin Sunday. Early in the evening they opened with a heavy fire and several rebel strongholds were captured, together with nearly four hundred prisoners. The irregulars in Moran's Hotel surrendered after two shells had hit the building.

An official bulletin issued shortly before nine o'clock says: "Thirty irregulars who occupied Moran's Hotel are now in our hands, as is also the section bounded by Talbot, Jurdom, Amiens and Gardiner streets.

"Gen. Ennis telephones at 8.20 that the irregulars have been driven from the Granville, and they hold."

A fresh outbreak of firing occurred in many parts of Dublin, and throughout the city there has been increased activity on the part of the Nationals, and heavy concentrations at tactical points. Free State troops began early occupying the buildings commanding the field of fire to the principal buildings in possession of the irregulars.

The fruitless efforts of Lord Mayor O'Neill and Archbishop Byrne, on a basis of the evacuation of the occupied building proved unsuccessful and as soon as this was known Provisional authorities prepared to dislodge the rebels. The attack on the Sackville-street area was developed on the west side, while other operations were prepared in another section of the city.

Several former officers of the Mid-Clare Brigade, who were engaged in recruiting and organizing against the National army, were placed under arrest. The irregulars posted a machine gun on the tower of Arnott & Co.'s premises in Henry street Saturday night, but the church bells were ringing the Angelus at six o'clock in the morning, they were accompanied by the sound of guns from the Granville, which continued for eleven the lull was broken only by the occasional crack of a sniper's rifle, but later the shelling increased.

An official report detailing National successes in the provinces announces that the army operating in Kilkenny has captured Ross, where the rebel force was evacuated by the insurgents before its investment was completed. The Mulvinett and Thomastown Barracks were also taken.

"All quiet," is the significant report from Cork and Limerick.

An official bulletin describes the evening operations of the National troops. They advanced in three directions, attacking the posts held by the irregulars, during the day. The occupants, and taking some prisoners. It specifies certain buildings occupied, and says that during the operations the rebels were hit by the irregulars were exploded.

A tunnel, apparently for the purpose of escape was found parallel to Farnard's Terrace. Many of the occupants escaped in Marlborough street area through breaches in the adjoining houses when their posts were attacked.

It confirms the capture of Moran's, Hughes' and Meagher's Hotels, with many prisoners. The irregulars are still in possession of Beresford's and other buildings in Sackville street, but are completely invested, and the advance continues.

The bulletin adds that the regulars are receiving the whole-hearted support of the civilian population.

Proof of the real influence and successes of the regulars was at Moran's Hotel. An 18-pounder was turned against it, and, after the third shot, the white flag was hoisted in the attic and crossed the street into a hotel opposite. In a few minutes, however, they hoisted the white flag and surrendered. Their casualties are not believed to be serious.

Moran's Hotel commanded an important position for communication between Nelson Pillar and the Great Northern station and the Central Telegraph Office. During the day artillery was used on the area that was invested by National troops, and its surrender was preceded by a long engagement with the rebels.

Following the destruction partially of machine-gun fire, the Nationals being posted in an advantageous position commanding the hotel. Armored cars played an important part in the attack.

Another rebel outpost captured was the Swan Hotel, in York street, opposite Stevens Bridge. The attack was made from an armored car with machine guns. The rebels replied vigorously and there followed a fusillade and the engagement continued intermittently for several hours. The walls of the hotel were badly battered, and by the retreat the rebels had left many wounded behind. Harcourt Terrace was also taken with about 18 prisoners. Thirty irregulars were captured in Adelaide road by a sudden rush of the Nationals.

RAILWAY SHOPMEN OUT

Thousands of Workers Have Gone on Strike in U.S.

President Harding Was Unable to Arrange a Compromise, and the Washington Government Regards Walkout as an Act of Defiance—Trains Will Run on Regular Schedules.

CHICAGO, July 2.—Notwithstanding the efforts of the Federal Government, acting through the United States Railroad Labor Board, to throttle a strike of the nation's railway shop workers, thousands of shopmen answered the call of their union leaders and laid down their tools at 10 o'clock Saturday.

There was no interruption of traffic on any line. Engineers and trainmen stuck to their posts, although under instructions from brotherhood chiefs, they performed only their regular duties. All trains, the railroads reported, were running on schedule.

Statements from railroad executives all over the country, although admitting large desertions from the shop ranks, reiterated their stand that transportation was not crippled and would continue so—perhaps for months.

No further effort would be made to settle the strike by the Railroad Labor Board, it was said at the board's offices. From Washington came word that the administration was solidly back of the board in its stand on the strike question. The failure of B. M. Jewell and other shop union heads to appear before an official investigation by the board Friday, spelled the end of the tribunal's intervention, according to Chairman Ben. W. Hooper.

The power of the United States Government, coupled with public sentiment, will give every protection to every railroad employe who remains on the job and to all new men who take the place of strikers in the present railroad walkout. Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the U. S. Railroad Labor Board, declared in a statement Sunday.

The only action to complete the board's case in the strike now will be an official announcement of the board's views, an announcement expected to come within the week.

The administration took the stand that the strike was against decisions of the Labor Board. The shop strike was called to enforce demands: (1) the $60,000,000 wage cut which went into effect July 1, along with a $75,000,000 cut for other classes recently ordered by the board; (2) modification of seven rules, reducing overtime pay, also recently promulgated by the board, and (3) the alleged illegal contracting of work by some roads to outside firms.

Much of the cause for grievance, railroad heads declared, was removed Friday when a dozen roads announced before the board that they would discontinue all contract work.

Despite the claim of four carriers of the country reported the walkout as general.

Mr. Jewell explained he ignored the Labor Board's summons because the board failed to exclude from wage reduction hearings almost eighty cases in which part or wholly violated rulings of the Government tribunal, which he said had caused railway employes to regard the board with no little misgivings.

"Practically all of these eighty roads violated decisions of the Labor Board," Mr. Jewell said, "yet they were included in the wage reduction hearings. If the board had ruled that these roads were not entitled to participate in these hearings the respect of railroad labor for the tribunal would have been increased materially. Railroad labor would then have looked to the board as a tribunal willing and ready to deal out justice. If this had been done, the officials of the shop crafts could have gone to the men with title for an argument and averted the strike. But this was not done, and postponement of the strike was humanly impossible.

"In the first place, my appearance before the board could not have resulted in anything. The board should have subpoenaed officials who signed the telegram authorizing the strike. Only those men could recall the order, and I had done any such thing I would have forfeited my office immediately.

"Justification of my refusal to obey the summons is seen in the fact that the men are now on strike, without bloodshed or loss of life and are upholding law and order. If I had gone before the board there would have resulted misunderstandings which would have ended in chaos among the shop craft organization."

Mr. Jewell said that announcement of the results of the shopmen's strike ballot could probably be made following a meeting of the executive council of the union.

Delorme Is Insane.

MONTREAL, July 3.—After being out twenty minutes, the jury which heard the evidence on the question of the mental condition of Adelard Delorme, charged with murdering his half-brother, Raoul, Friday afternoon brought in a unanimous verdict of insanity against the accused.

Justice Lafontaine who has presided at the inquiry into Delorme's sanity, addressing court officers, said that Delorme must be carefully guarded until it was ascertained from the Department of the Attorney-General at Quebec, which reports the case to Ottawa, where asylum he is to be committed to during the pleasure of the authorities.

Delorme heard the jury verdict without emotion.

Takes Over Atlantic Cables.

HALIFAX, July 3.—The direct United States cable from Ballingskelings, Ireland, to Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, and Halifax was taken over here on Saturday by the Imperial Cable from the Western Union Cable Company. The British Government purchased the cable in November, 1920, for £750,000, but it remained under Western Union control by lease until Friday night. A section of the cable running from Halifax to Rye Beach, Mass., remains with the Western Union Company.

The cable taken over was laid in 1874 and was the first transatlantic cable to use the Dr. Muirhead system of duplex. Its first Nova Scotia landing place was at Tor Bay, Guysboro county, but it was moved to Halifax in 1887. The Western Union Company took control of it from the Direct United States Cable Company in 1912.

Explorer's Daring Feat.

There is a pretty general idea that the land around the Arctic Sea is lifeless. And another widely held belief is that only very few fish exist in the waters near the poles. Both of these ideas are disproved by the famous explorer, Stefansson, in his book, "Friendly Arctic."

In order to prove that fish did exist in such far off regions, the author and his companion risked their lives. Part of their provisions consisted of the Beaufort Sea without taking food supplies. Fortunately, their belief was justified, and they were able to live on the fish they captured.

There is as much fish to the cubic mile of the Arctic Sea as to every square mile of land. And there are birds by the million, insects galore, and many other forms of life.

Then, again, there is a common belief that during the dark days, the long "night" of the North, the Eskimo is idle. Such is not the case, for this period the Eskimo reserves for his holidays. He will then pay journeys to friends, and when he arrives will give his time to dancing, singing and merry-making. Indeed, many of the inhabitants the winter darkness is eagerly awaited.

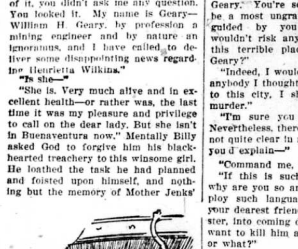
So this was the vision he had volunteered to meet aboard La Estrellita, and by specious lie and hypocritic smiles, turn her back from the portals of Buenaventura to that dear old United States, which, Billy suddenly recalled with poignant pain, is a sizable country in which a young lady may very readily be lost forever. With the quick eye of youth, he noted that Dolores was perfectly wonderful in a white flannel skirt and jacket, white buck boots, white panama hat with a gorgeous puggaree, a mannish little linen collar, and a red four-in-hand tie. From under that white hat peeped a profusion of crinkly brown hair with a slightly reddish tinge to it; her eyes were big and brown and wide apart, with golden flecks in them; their glance met Billy's hungry gaze simply, directly, and with a curiosity there was no attempt to hide. Her nose was patrician; her beautiful short upper lip revealed the tips of two perfect, milk-white front teeth: she was, Billy Geary told himself, a goddess before whom all low, worthless, ornery fellows like himself should grovel and die happy, if perchance she might be so minded as to walk on their faces! He was aroused from his critical inventory when the hoarse spoke again:

"You haven't answered my question, sir!"

"No," said Billy. "I didn't. Stupid of me, too. However, come to think of it, you didn't ask me any question. You looked it. My name is Geary—William H Geary, by profession a mining engineer and by nature an ignoramus, and I have called to deliver some disappointing news regarding Henrietta Wilkins."

"Is she—"

"She is. Very much alive and in excellent health—or rather was, the last time it was my pleasure and privilege to call on the dear lady. But she isn't in Buenaventura now." Mentally Billy asked God to forgive him his black-hearted treachery to this winsome girl. He loathed the task he had planned and foisted upon himself, and nothing but the memory of Mother Jenks'



"You Haven't Answered My Question."

manifold kindnesses to him in a day, thanks to Jack Webster, now happily behind him, could have induced him to go through to the finish.

"Why, where is she?" Dolores queried; and Billy could have wept at the fright in those lovely brown eyes.

He waved his hand airily. "Quien sabe?" he said. "She left three weeks ago for New Orleans to visit you. I dare say you passed each other on the road—here, here, Miss Ruey, don't cry."

He took a recess of three minutes, while Dolores dabbed her eyes and went through sundry other motions of being brave. Then he proceeded with his nefarious recital.

"When your cablegram arrived, Miss Ruey, naturally Mrs. Wilkins was not here to receive it, and as I was the only person who had her address, the cable agent referred it to me. Under the circumstances, not knowing where I could reach you with a cable informing you that Mrs. Wilkins was headed for California to see you, I had no other alternative but to let matters take their course. I decided you might arrive on La Estrellita, so I called to welcome you to our thriving little city, and, as a friend of about two minutes' standing, to warn you away from it."

Billy's mien, as he voiced this warning, was so singularly mysterious that Dolores' curiosity was aroused instantly and rose superior to her grief. "Why, what's the matter?" she demanded.

Billy looked around, as if fearful of being overheard. He lowered his voice. "We're going to have one grand little first-class revolution," he replied. "It's due to bust almost any night now, and when it does, the streets of San Buenaventura will run red with blood."

Dolores blanched. "Oh, dearie me," she quavered. "Do they still have revolutions here? You know, Mr. Geary, my poor father was killed in one."

"Yes, and the same old political gang that shot him is still on deck." Billy warned her. "It would be highly dangerous for a Ruey, man or woman, to show his or her nose around Buenaventura about now. Besides, Miss Ruey, that isn't the worst," he continued, for a whole-hearted lad was Billy, who never did anything by halves. "The city is reeking with cholera," he declared.

"Cholera!" Dolores' big brown eyes grew bigger with wonder and concern. "How strange the port authorities didn't warn us at New Orleans!"

"Tish! Tush! Fiddlesticks and then some. The fruit company censors everything, Miss Ruey, and the news doesn't get out."

"But the port doctor just said the passengers could go ashore."

"What's a human life to a doctor? Besides, he's on the slush-fund pay roll and does whatever the higherups tell him. You be guided by what I tell you, Miss Ruey, and do not set foot on Sobranten soil. If you stay aboard La Estrellita, you'll have your nice clean stateroom, your well-cooked meals, your bath, and the attentions of the stewardess. The steamer will be loaded in two days; then you go back to New Orleans and by the time you arrive there I'll have been in communication by cable with Mother Jenks—I mean—"

"Mother who?" Dolores demanded.

"A mere slip of the tongue, Miss Ruey. I was thinking of my landlady. I meant Mrs. Wilkins—"

"I'm so awfully obliged to you, Mr. Geary." You're so kind, I'm sure I'd be a most ungrateful girl not to be guided by you accordingly. You wouldn't risk any friend of yours in this terrible place, would you, Mr. Geary?"

"Indeed, I would not. By permitting anybody I thought anything of to come to this city, I should feel guilty of murder."

"I'm sure you would, Mr. Geary. Nevertheless, there is one point that is not quite clear in my mind, and I wish you'd explain—"

"Command me, Miss Ruey."

"If this is such a frightful place, why are you so anxious, if I may employ such language, to hornswoggle your dearest friend, John S. Webster, into coming down here? Do you want to kill him and get his money—or what?"

Billy's face flamed at thought of the embarrassing error his glib tongue had led him into. He cursed himself for a star-spangled jackass, and while he was engaged in this interesting pastime Dolores spoke again.

"And by the way, which is it? Miss Wilkins or Mrs.? You've called her both, and when I reminded you she was a Miss, you agreed with me, whereas she is nothing of the sort. She's a Mrs. Then you blurted out something about a Mother Jenks, and finally, Mr. Geary, it occurs to me that for a complete stranger you are unduly interested in my welfare. I'm not such a goose as to assimilate your weird tales of death from disease. It occurs to me that if your friend John S. Webster can risk Buenaventura, I can also."

"You—you know that old tarantula?" Billy gasped. "Why I—I came out to warn him off the grass, too."

Dolores walked a step closer to Billy and eyed him disapprovingly. "I'm so sorry I can't believe that statement," she replied. "It happens that I was standing by the companion-ladder when you came aboard and spoke to the purser; when you asked him if Mr. Webster was aboard, your face was alight with eagerness and anticipation, but when you had reason to believe he was not aboard, you looked so terribly disappointed I felt sorry for you.

"I'm going ashore, if it's the last act of my life, and when I get there I'm going to interview the cable agent; then I'm going to call at the steamship office and scan the passenger list of the last three north-bound steamers, and if I do not find Henrietta Wilkins' name on one of those passenger lists I'm going up to Calle de Concordia No. 19—"

"I surrender unconditionally," groaned Billy. "I'm a liar from beginning to end. I overlooked my hand. I beg of you to believe me, however, when I tell you that I only told you those whoppers because I was in honor bound to tell them. Personally, I don't want you to go away—at least, not until I'm ready to go away, too! Miss Ruey, my nose is in the dust. There is a fever in my brain and a misery in my heart—"

"And contrition in your face," she interrupted him laughingly. "You're forgiven, Mr. Geary — on one condition."

"Name it," he answered.

"Tell me everything from beginning to end."

So Billy told her. "I would much rather have been visited with a plague of boils, like our old friend, the late Job, than have to tell you this, Miss Ruey," he concluded his recital. "Man proposes, but God disposes, and you're here and bound to learn the truth sooner or later. Mother isn't a lady and she knows it, but take it from me, Miss Ruey, she's a grand old piece of work. She's a scout—a ring-tailed sport—a regular individual and game as a gander."

"And I mustn't call at El Buen Amigo, Mr. Geary?"

"Perish the thought! Mother must call on you. El Buen Amigo is what you might term a hotel for tropical tramps of the masculine sex. Nearly all of Mother's guests have a past, you know. They're the submerged white tenth of Sobrante.

"Then my benefactor must call to see me here," Billy nodded. "When will you bring her here?"

Billy reflected that Mother Jenks had been up rather late the night before and that trade in the cantina of El Buen Amigo had been unusually brisk; so since he desired to exhibit the old lady at her best, he concluded it might be well to spar for wind.

"Tomorrow at 10," he declared. Dolores inclined her head. Something told her she had better leave all future details to the amiable William.

"I remember you inquired for your friend, Mr. Webster, when you came aboard the steamer."

"I remember it, too," Billy countered ruefully. "I can't imagine what's become of him. Miss Ruey, did you ever go to meet the only human being in the world and discover that for some mysterious reason he had failed to keep the appointment? Miss Ruey, you'll have to meet old John Stuart the minute he lights in Buenaventura. He's some boy."

"Old John Stuart?" she queried. "How old?"

"Oh, thirty-nine or forty on actual count, but one of the kind that will live to be a thousand and then have to be killed with an axe. He's coming to Sobrante to help me put over a mining deal."

"How interesting, Mr. Geary! No wonder you were disappointed."

The last sentence was a shaft deliberately launched; for Dolores' delight it made a keyhole in Billy Geary's heart.

"Don't get me wrong, Miss Ruey," he hastened to assure her. "I have a good mine, but I'd trade it for a handshake from Jack! The good Lord only published one edition of Jack, and limited the edition to one volume; then the plates were melted for the junk we call the human race. Two weeks ago, when I was sick and penniless and despairing, the possessor of a concession on a fortune, but without a centavo in my pockets to buy a banana, when I was a veritable beachcomber and existing on the charity of Mother Jenks, I managed finally to communicate with old Jack and told him where I was and what I had. There's his answer, Miss Ruey, and I'm not ashamed to say that when I got it I cried like a kid." And Billy handed her John Stuart Webster's remarkable cablegram, the receipt of which had, for Billy Geary, transformed night into day, purgatory into paradise. Dolores read it.

"No wonder you love him," she declared, and added artlessly: "His wife must simply adore him."

"He has no wife to bother his life, so he paddles his own canoe," Billy recited. "I don't believe the old sour dough has ever been in love with anything more charming than the goddess of fortune. He's woman-proof."

"About Mrs. Jenks," Dolores continued, abruptly changing the subject. "How nice to reflect that after she had trusted you and believed in you when you were penniless, you were enabled to justify her faith."

"You bet!" Billy declared. "I feel that I can never possibly hope to catch even with the old Samaritan, although I did try to show her how much I appreciated her."

"I dare say you went right out and bought her an impossible hat," Dolores challenged roguishly.

"No, I didn't, for a very sufficient reason. Down here the ladies do not wear hats. But I'll tell you what I did buy her, Miss Ruey—and oh, by George, I'm glad now I did it. She'll wear them tomorrow when I bring her to see you. I bought her a new black silk dress and an old-lace collar, and a gold breast pin and a tortoise shell hair comb and hired an open carriage and took her for an evening ride on the Malecon to listen to the band concert."

"Did she like that?"

"She ate it up," Billy declared with conviction. "I think it was her first adventure in democracy."

Billy's pulse was still far from normal when he reached El Buen Amigo, for he was infused with a strange, new-found warmth that burned like malarial fever, but wasn't. He wasted no preliminaries on Mother Jenks, but bluntly acquainted her with the facts in the case.

Mother Jenks eyed him a moment wildly. "Good gracious!" she gasped; she reached for her favorite elixir, but Billy got the bottle first.

"Nothing doing," he warned this strange publican. "Mother, you're funking it—and what would your sainted 'Enery say to that? Do you want that angel to kiss you and get a whiff of this brandy?"

Mother Jenks' eyes actually popped. "Gor', Willie, you've grown," she cried. "I'll tole ye she's a lydy! Me kiss the lamb! Hi trust, Mr. Geary, as 'ow I know my place an' can keep it."

"Yes, I know," Billy soothed the frightened old woman, "but the truth is Miss Dolores doesn't know here—and something tells me if she does she'll forget it. She'll take you in her arms and kiss you, sure as death and taxes."

And she did! "My lamb, my lamb," sobbed Mother Jenks the next morning, and rested her old cheek, with its rum-begotten hue, close to the rose-tinted ivory cheek of the ward. "Me—wot I am—an' to think—"

"You're a sweet old dear," Dolores whispered, patting the gray head; "and I'm going to call you Mother."

"Mr. William H. Geary," the girl remarked that night, "I know now why your friend, Mr. Webster, sent that cablegram. I think you're a scout too."

For reasons best known to himself Mr. Geary blushed furiously. "I—I'd better go and break the news to Mother," he suggested inanely. She held out her hand; and Billy, having been long enough in Sobrante to have acquired the habit, bent his malarial person over that hand and kissed it. As he went out it occurred to him that had the lobby of the Hotel Mateo been paved with eggs, he must have floated over them like a wraith so light did he feel within.

CHAPTER VII.

Webster reached New Orleans at the end of the first day of his journey to discover that he was one day late to board the Atlanta—a banana boat of the Consolidated Fruit company's line plying regularly between New Orleans and that company's depots at Limon and San Buenaventura—which necessitated a wait of three days for the steamer La Estrellita of the Caribbean Mail line, running to Caracas and way ports.

He decided to visit the ticket office of the Caribbean Mail line immediately and avoid the rush in case the travel should be heavy.

The steamship office was in Canal street. The clerk was waiting on two well-dressed and palpably low-bred sons of the tropics, to whom he had just displayed a passenger list which the two were scanning critically. Their interest in it was so obvious that unconsciously Webster peeped over their shoulders (no difficult task for one of his stature) and discovered it to be the passenger list of the steamer La Estrellita. They were conversing together in low tones and Webster, who had spent many years of his life following his profession in Mexico, recognized their speech as the bastard Spanish of the peon.

He sat down in the lobby wall seat and waited until the pair, having completed their scrutiny of the list, turned to pass out. He glanced at them casually. One was a tall thin man whose bloodshot eyes were inclined to "pop" a little—infallible evidence in the Latin-American that he is drinking more hard liquor than is good for him.

His companion was plainly of the same racial stock, although Webster suspected him of a slight admixture of negro blood. He was short, stocky, and aggressive looking; like his companion, bejeweled and possessed of a thin, carefully cultivated moustache that seemed to consist of about nine teen hairs on one side and twenty on the other. Evidently once upon a time, as the story books have it, he had been shot. Webster suspected a Mauser bullet, fired at long range, had entered his right cheek, just below the malar, ranged downward through his mouth and out through a fold of flabby flesh under his left jowl. It must have been a frightful wound, but it has healed well except at the point of entrance, where it had a tendency to pucker considerably, thus drawing the man's eyelid down on his cheek and giving to that visual organ something of the appearance of a bulldog's.

Webster gazed after them whimsically as he approached the counter.

"I'd hate to make up some night and find that hombre with the puckered eye leaning over me. By the way," he continued, suddenly apprehensive, "do you get much of that paraquest travel on your line?"

"About 80 per cent. of it is off color, sir."

Webster pondered the 80-per-cent. probability of being berthed in the same stateroom with one of those people and the prospect was as revolting to him as would be an uninvited negro guest at the dining table of a southern family. He had all a Westerner's hatred for the breed.

"Well, I want a ticket to San Buenaventura," he informed the clerk, "but I don't relish the idea of a Greaser in the same stateroom with me. I wonder if you couldn't manage to fix me with a stateroom all to myself or at least arrange it so that in the event of company I'll draw a white man."

"I'm sorry, sir, but I cannot guarantee you absolute privacy nor any kind of white man. It's pretty mixed travel to all Central American ports."

"How many berths in your first-class staterooms?"

"Two."

Webster smiled brightly. He had found a way out of the difficulty. "I'll buy 'em both, son," he announced.

"I cannot sell you an entire stateroom, sir. It's against the orders of the company to sell two berths to one man. The travel is pretty brisk and it's hardly fair to the public, you know."

"Well, suppose I buy one ticket for myself and the other for—well, for my valet, let us say. Of course," he added brightly, "I haven't engaged the valet yet and even should I do so I wouldn't be at all surprised if the rascal missed the boat!"

The clerk glanced at him with a slow smile, and pondered. "Well," he said presently, "if you care to buy a ticket for your valet, I'm sure I shouldn't worry whether or not he catches the boat. If my records show that the space is sold to two men and the purser collects two tickets, I think you'll be pretty safe from intrusion."

"To the harassed traveler," said Mr. Webster, "a meeting with a gentleman of your discretion is as refreshing as a canteen of cool water in the desert. Shoot!" and he produced a handful of gold.

"I will—provided I have one empty cabin," and the clerk turned from the counter to consult his record of berths already sold and others reserved but not paid for. Presently he faced Webster at the counter.

"The outlook is very blue," he announced. "However, I have one berth in No. 34 reserved by a gentleman who was to call for it by two o'clock to-day." He looked at his watch. "It is now a quarter of one. If the reservation isn't claimed promptly at two o'clock I shall cancel it and reserve for you both berths in that room. If you will be good enough to leave me your name and address I will telephone you after that hour. In the meantime, you may make reservation of the other berth in the same stateroom. I feel very confident that the reservation in No. 34 will not be called for, Mr.—er——"

"Webster—John S. Webster. You are very kind, indeed. I'm at the St. Charles."

"Be there at a quarter after two, Mr. Webster, and you will hear from me promptly on the minute," the clerk assured him; whereupon Webster paid for one berth and departed for his hotel with a feeling that the clerk's report would be favorable.

True to his promise, at precisely a quarter after two, the ticket clerk telephoned Webster at his hotel that the berth in No. 34 had been canceled and the entire stateroom was now at his disposal.

"If you will be good enough to give me the name of your valet," he concluded, "I will fill in both names on my passenger manifest and send the tickets to your hotel by messenger immediately. You can then sign the tickets—I have already signed them as witness—and pay the messenger."

"Well, I haven't engaged that valet as yet," Webster began.

"What's the odds? He's going to miss the boat, anyhow. All I require is a name."

"That ought to be a simple request to comply with. Let me see!"

"I read a book once, Mr. Webster, and the valet in that book was called Andrew Bowers."

"Bowers is a fine old English name. Let us seek no further. Andrew Bowers it is."

"Thank you. All you have to do then is to remember to sign the name, Andrew Bowers, to one ticket. Don't forget your valet's name now, and ball everything up," and the clerk hung up, laughing.

Half an hour later a boy from the steamship office arrived with the tickets, collected for them, and departed, leaving John Stuart Webster singularly pleased with himself and at peace with the entire world.

A "large" dinner at Antoine's that night (Webser had heard of Antoine's dinners, both large and small and was resolved not to leave New Orleans until he had visited the famous restaurant), and a stroll through the picturesque old French quarter and along the levee next day, helped to render his enforced stay in New Orleans delightful, interesting, and instructive. For Sunday he planned an early morning visit to the old French market, around which still lingers much of the picturesque charm and colorful romance of a day that is done—that echo of a stirring past all to himself or at least arrange it so that in the event of company I'll draw a white man."

"I'm sorry, sir, but I cannot guarantee you absolute privacy nor any kind of white man. It's pretty mixed travel to all Central American ports."

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. The lovers were walking slowly, arm in arm, along the path by which the girl had come, so with a courteous and gentleness that were innate in him, Webster stepped out of sight behind the statue of Old Hickory; for he did not desire, by his mere presence, to intrude a discordant note in the perfect harmony of those two human hearts. He knew they desired that sylvan path to themselves; that evidently they had sought their early morning tryst in the knowledge that the square was likely to be deserted at this hour.

The young man was speaking as they passed; his voice was rich, pleasant, vibrant with the earnestness of what he had to say with a power little silver mounted walking stick he slashed at spears of grass alongside the path; the girl was crying a little. Neither of them had seen him, so he entered a path that led from them at right angles.

He had proceeded but a few feet along this trail when, through a break in the shrubbery ahead of him, he saw two men. Brief as was his glimpse of them, Webster instantly recognized the two Central Americans he had seen in the steamship ticket office two days previous.

They were not walking as walk two men abroad at this hour for a constitutional. Neither did they walk as walk men churchward bound. A slight, skulking air marked their progress, and caused Webster to wonder idly what they were stalking.

He turned into the path down which the two men had passed, not with the slightest idea of shadowing them, but because his destination lay in that direction.

Both men had forsaken the graveled path and were walking on the soft velvet of blue grass lawn that fringed it!

"Perhaps I'd better deaden my hoof beats also," John Stuart Webster soliloquized, and followed suit immediately.

He had scarcely done so when the men ahead of him paused abruptly. Webster did likewise, and responding —subconsciously, perhaps, to the remembrance of the cruel, hard glance of the man with the puckered eye—he stepped out of sight behind a broad oak tree. Through the trees and shrubbery he could still see the lovers, who had halted and evidently were about to part.

Webster saw the young man glance warily about; then, apparently satisfied there was none to spy upon them, he drew the girl gently toward him.

Drew the Girl Gently Toward Him.

She clung to him for nearly a minute, sobbing; then he raised her face tenderly, kissed her, pressed her from him, and walked swiftly away without looking back.

It was a sweet and rather touching little tableau; to John Stuart Webster, imaginative and possessed of a romantic streak in his nature, it was more than a tableau. It was a moving picture!

"I suppose her old man objects to the young fellow," he muttered to himself sympathetically, "and he can't come near the house. They've met here for the fond farewell, and now the young fellow's going out West to make his fortune, so he can come back and claim the girl. Huh! If he wants

CAMPERS

ONTARIO'S forest wealth is dwindling. Every year forest fires take disastrous toll. Careless campers cause eleven per cent. of Ontario's forest fires. Last summer 112 cases of neglected camp fires were reported. This summer be careful.

Save Ontario's Forests
They're Yours

When you build your fire to make tea, fry bacon or add cheer to pipe and story-telling time, use a woodsman's precautions.

The real woodsman builds his fire on an old fireplace, if there be one handy. Failing that he scrapes away all litter, moss and fibrous rotted wood down to the mineral soil, or the bare rock, and preferably some place close to the water. He knows that if fire gets into the moss or the upper woody layer of forest soil, or in a half-rotted log or stump, it "holds over," burns away unnoticed underneath, and unless followed up and carefully put out, is liable to break into a flame later. He knows how hard it is to put such deep-smouldering fire out. So he makes his cooking fire surprisingly small and compact, and chooses a spot that is absolutely safe.

It is a mark of his finished woodsmanship how thoroughly he drowns his fire out with plenty of water when he is through with it. Save the forests. You may want to camp again.

DON'T

DON'T take chances with fire in Ontario's forests.

DON'T throw away cigarette or cigar butts, pipe "heels" or burnt matches until you are dead sure they are out.

DON'T neglect to drown out your fire with lots of water.

DON'T build your camp fire against a rotten log or stump—nor on windy points; nor near moss patches; nor at the base of a tree.
Build it in a former fireplace, or on a flat rock, or on a spot cleared down to the true soil below, or by the edge of the water.

DON'T forget that the upper layer of ground in the forest consists of partially rotted wood which will burn.

WELCOME JIM CROW.

Killing Off Entire Family Would Be a Mistake.

Like most outlaws, the notorious Jim Crow has some points that are commended among law-abiding citizens, but when he is a bad bird he is a hard-boiled egg. His springtime ravages on the cornfield are largely responsible for his unsavory reputation, but he has added to it by occasional raids on the poultry yard, depredations on wild birds, and attacks on crops other than corn. At certain seasons and in certain localities he becomes such a nuisance and a detriment to farming that he must be warned by making an example of some members of his gang.

Jim is only about half bad, and because of his better half, which does not mean his wife, who is just as black as he is, it is not advisable to treat him too harshly. Nearly one-fifth of his food is made up of insects, and he includes on his menu —grasshoppers, caterpillars and white grubs and their parents, the May beetles.

Probably we could not get along so well without Jim Crow as with him. Killing off the whole family, if that were possible, would be a shortsighted policy. So, when the poisoning of crows is recommended, this measure should be looked upon merely as a warning to Jim and his family that they have been going too far and that they can't get away with everything. They are wary enough not to need many repetitions of the lesson, at least not in one season.

Every spring farmers revive their old feud with the Jim Crow family, carrying on a desultory battle by means of scarecrows, epithets, and the more effective deterrents of coal tar and poison. Coal tar, which may be secured at gas plants and some paint shops, it not a poison, but it imparts a disagreeable gassy odor to the seed grain that is distasteful to crows and other pests. It has the advantage, not possessed by some other deterrents on the market, of not affecting the germination of the corn when used in limited quantities. A tablespoonful is used to a half bushel of seed. The grain is first heated by an application of warm water, and then drained. The coal tar is added immediately and a thorough stirring will give each kernel an even coating. The seed is then spread out to dry or is dried by the addition of ashes, land plaster, or powdered earth.

The best deterrent, however, is strychnine, which may be applied to corn in a paste made up in the proportion of one ounce of powdered strychnine, 2 tablespoonfuls of starch, and 1½ pints of water to 20 quarts of corn. The starch and strychnine are put into the water, which is heated to boiling, and stirred well when the starch begins to thicken. This paste is poured on the corn and stirred into it until thoroughly distributed. The corn is spread to dry and is then ready to use. This method is better than the old one of steeping the corn in a strong strychnine solution. Because of their wariness, it will not be possible to kill many of the crows, but a little of this poisoned corn scattered over the field of sprouting corn will get a few of them, and the rest will take the warning and leave. Using whole corn for bait lessens the dancer of poisoning smaller seed-eating birds. Care should be taken not to distribute the poisoned grain near the farm buildings, where domestic animals might pick it up. The crows usually do their corn-pulling at some distance from the buildings.

Before going ahead with poisoning operations, which involve the spreading of poison, it is always advisable to look up laws and local regulations regarding the distribution of poison. Local conditi ns may modify practices a great deal especially in thickly-populated regions.

Importing Quail.

A consignment of live quail from Spokane has been received by the Provincial Game Board, for release in the uplands district. These birds were given in exchange for Mongolian pheasants. Another consignment is expected from the Eastern States in exchange for pheasants.

Health Is Better.

Dr. M. P. McClellan, veterinary surgeon of the live stock branch of the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture, states that during the past winter the health of domestic animals — horses, cattle, sheep and swine alike — was generally better than it has been for the last few years.

Water Helps Laying Fowls.

A plentiful supply of clean, fresh water must always be available to hens. The fowls drink freely, especially when laying heavily, and should not be stinted of such a necessary and cheap material as water. The water pan or dish should be kept clean.

of poultry. One successful poultry raiser uses a contrivance such as the one illustrated on this page. The chickens being forced to hop upon the elevated platform in order to reach the water, and being prevented from standing on the edge of the dish and contaminating the water, because of the necessity of reaching between the slats to drink.

Obtaining Profits In Pigs.

Profit comes not in how little we can keep the pig on, but in how much we can get him to eat of a balanced ration. The younger the animal is more thoroughly it digests its food. Therefore, mature pigs early. Three months' 200-lb. pig costs one-half the 200-lb. eighteen months' pig.

The Mulberry.

The old-time fruit-bearing mulberry has lost its place in the gardens of southern Ontario. Better fruits have crowded it out, until it is rarely seen in the modern garden or fruit plantation. Sometimes planted as a food tree for birds by bird enthusiasts or by those desiring to play with silk worm culture in this northern climate. During the past year, through southwestern Ontario mulberry trees have been offered to the public by traveling agents. The experiences of the past with the mulberry as a fruit producing tree and as a food producing tree for silk worms in Ontario and the United States would indicate that nothing very great by way of achievement or profit is likely to follow the planting of any of the mulberry varieties in Ontario. One tree for the birds is: Probably all any one farm can afford. As for the development of mulberry plantations for silk culture, such hardly seems profitably possible under the climatic and labor conditions of Ontario—L. Stevenson, Secretary, Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

BACON REQUIREMENTS

ONTARIO BERKSHIRE TO CONFORM TO DEMANDS OF TRADE.

Standard of Excellencies Has Been Adopted for This Special Breed by the Ontario Berkshire Breeders' Association, and Good Results Are Expected to Be Seen Later In the Trade.

The outcome of the effort of the committee appointed by the Ontario Berkshire Breeders' Society at their annual meeting, to draft a "standard of excellence" for the breed is announced by the secretary of the society, J. E. Rettie, in a list of points considered desirable in Berkshires intended to conform to requirements of the Canadian hog trade. This "standard of excellence" has been adopted by the Ontario Berkshire Breeders' Society.

Mr. Rettie points out that some breeders have in a measure followed the "standard of excellence" by the American Berkshire Association. A hog which conforms to this standard, he declares, would be virtually a thick, fat or lard type of hog. Others have kept in mind the British "standard of excellence," which produces a hog much more near the bacon type than what is called for in the American standard. Others have paid comparatively little attention to either standards. The result has been that we have a variety of types within the Berkshire breed in Canada. It was felt, by the breeders, that an effort should be made to standardize the breed and obtain a greater uniformity.

It is believed that, if the new "standard" adopted by the committee appointed by the Ontario breeders of Berkshire swine, is followed, and breeding stock selected to conform to it, the essential and attractive points of the Berkshire breed type will be retained, and at the same time a hog will be produced from which our packers can manufacture a very high-grade of Wiltshire bacon, for the British market. It is the hope of the committee that all breeders of Berkshires, not only in Ontario, but in every province of the Dominion, will select their breeding stock to produce the animal called for in this "standard of excellence." It is felt that if they do this it will be a comparatively short time until the Berkshire will be sought for, not only on account of his attractive appearance and carriage and good feeding qualities, but also because he will produce bacon of a very high quality, in an economical manner.

Select Potatoes for Seed.

The custom of using as seed potatoes left from the previous season's crop, after having disposed of the best, must be discontinued if the average quality and yield of the crop is to be materially improved. The grower cannot expect to get maximum milk yields from scrub cows. The best time to select seed potatoes, according to the specialists, is in the fall when the crop is being harvested. Then the yield of the individual plant and the quality of the tubers can be considered.

Good seed is pure in respect to the variety and produced by healthy, vigorous, heavy-yielding plants grown under favorable climatic conditions; is somewhat immature; reasonably uniform in size and shape; free and sound. The first sprouts should begin to develop at planting time.

General Farm Notes.

Excessive feeding of lubricating oils often causes deposits of carbon in the tractor engine.

The cost of dusting, counting both labor and materials, is about the same as for spraying.

Asparagus is one of the most useful of garden vegetables in the spring.

Rhodes grass bears drought well but is liable to be "winter killed" in temperatures of less than 15 degrees.

Holstein-Friesland.

It is quite generally known that there are red and white as well as black and white cattle in Friesland, the home of the Holstein-Friesian breed, but the two types are kept distinct.

Another Fox Ranch.

An addition to the eleven domestic fur ranches previously existing in British Columbia has been made by the establishment of a fox ranch in the Saanich district.

SUMMER FABRICS ARE FASCINATING

Cottons, Linens and Soft Silks Are Developed Into Charming Frocks.

NO ONE MATERIAL IN LEAD

Thin Organdies and Swisses and Dotted Mulls Are Receiving Much Attention and Bid for Future Popularity.

We hold out our hands to welcome the real summer weather, because, observes a fashion writer, there comes our chance to take on the picturesque garments, and this year not only have the summer fabrics been perfected to a formerly unsuspected degree, but their fineness and beauty have inspired the creators of fashions to work them into more fascinating summer frocks. There are things that can be done with cottons and linens and soft silks that could not be attempted in more cumbersome fabrics. And this year they have been done in a most expressive way. Of trimmings there are few and those which do appear are handled in a restrained manner, being applied only where they will show to their best advantage. They sink into the gown as though they were a pre-conceived part of it, instead of something flung on at the last moment, when the idea of trimming suddenly became uppermost.

So many are the fabrics, both of domestic and imported origin, that no one of them can be said to hold the lead above another. But the thin organdies and swiss and dotted mulls certainly have received a lot of attention all buying signs point to the fact that they will be more popular for daily and evening wear than they have ever been before. Their colors are their chief fascination, for there are the most beautiful hues and tones; the dyers have outstripped themselves in achieving really thrilling colors. And they have done this coloring so subtly that, no matter how startling the color may be, it still has the softness that makes it becoming.

Combinations of Streng Colors.

The combinations of strong colors with patches and frills and flounces of white organdie are being wonderfully done. Organdie in pure white is used with ginghams, with calicoes, with chintzes, with sateens, with swiss with crepes, with other organdies, with silks—yes, with every fabric known to the summer wardrobe. White organdie in some form or another is almost a necessity, and there is this to be said for it; when it is used, that dress wherein it is incorporated is bound to be a success, for the crispness of the transparent white stuff is so becoming that it cannot be rivaled by any other material or trimming.

In some cases bits of white lace are combined with the white organdie to make the trimming more notable, but the lace is fine and narrow. Filet has gone out of fashion more or less —perhaps because it was so consistently overdone—and in its place we have the real bits of valenciennes, the embroidered swiss trimmings. The latter embroideries are coming along in colors made to match the tones of the materials, and these are as good looking as the spring dyed laces have been, with a character all their own to make them notable. The cream-colored swiss embroidered are extremely good looking when used on gingham and organdie dresses for collars or fichus, or sometimes just for tiny turned-back edgings.

The heavier silks and the silk jerseys in different sorts of weaves are very much to be desired for summer costumes that have to be subjected to more or less of hard wear. After all, the lighter materials must be most delicately worn and treated, if they are to retain for any time the crispness which makes them what they are. But the loosely woven and crepy silks are the things that can be worn and worn and still hang on to the quality that was with them when they were created. For this reason, if for no other, they are highly interesting additions to the summer things for country and town wear. Then, they are cool to wear and in most instances they can be washed, so that they combine many attributes in one.

The Winsome Gingham Dress.

A gingham dress that is much admired daily has a little underskirt of the ubiquitous organdie and a little yoke with quaintly puffed white organdie sleeves. Then, at the places where the gingham meets the organdie there are blockings with bindings of black cotton braid. It makes a little picture dress most becoming to some types of women, and in its simplicity it has everything to recommend it.

Another gingham frock has a plain turned-back collar of the embroidered swiss. Then the tiny, short sleeves have a narrow turned-back edging of the same trimming. The gingham is in cool green and white checks and the trimming is of that deep cafe au lait tone that combines so nicely with the shades of green. The collar is rounded and the simplest sort of narrow black velvet ribbon bow is poised under the chin.

Carrying out the idea of the Bramley blouse, which has been so very popular all winter, there are summer ones being made in colored linens, with skirts to match and white linen collars and cuffs. Then there is a fetching model made of white heavy linen, with colored linen collars and cuffs with a narrow belt made of the colored linen stitched.

An organdie frock is made of a shade of yellow termed maize. It is a deep lustrous tone. Its trimming is made of simple puffings of white organdie not more than an inch and a half wide when finished. They edge the low and rounded neckline; they form two rows on the short, tightly-fitting sleeves, and they run around the skirt in two rows. The bodice of this frock is short waisted and slightly bloused and the skirt is quite full after the accepted manner of the summer organdies.

Demand Old-Fashioned Line.

Many of the little calico frocks are made up on this same accepted short-waisted model. There is something about the tininess of these all-over patterns that seems to demand that particular old-fashioned line. One that is extremely interesting in design has sleeves that are puffed in a restrained way, the little, tight arm bands being edged with a rick-rack braid. The calico is that red and black combination which is the acme of the period that the material represents and the braiding is in the same tone of red. There is a square cut yoke with the braided edging and the same braid runs around the bottom of the gathered skirt to make an uneven edge there. For a belt there is a simple piece of black velvet ribbon with long streamers at the left side.

The printed English sateens are just as popular as the calicoes, for both of these materials give practically the same effect. A yellow and black sateen model was made with one of these long, slightly fitted, slightly draped bodices. It was buttoned all the way up the back of that long waist with a row of the smallest possible black buttons. It had a pointed neckline edge with a little fluting of valenciennes lace and running along the base of this fluting was a bit of black velvet ribbon of the narrowest sort obtainable, tied in a saucy little bow where the V-neck came to a point.

HOW CHAUTAUQUA PLEASES

The Niagara Falls Evening Review for June 24th, has this to say of the Fourth Day's program at Chautauqua :

Mr. Tom Skeyhill, the noted Australian orator, soldier poet and student of worlds events, gave an interesting lecture at the Chautauqua tent this morning to be called "The Babylonian Finger Writes Again." The speaker was a visitor in the city in the year 1919 and won many admirations, respect and appreciation from the large audience that greeted him on his first visit.

Mr. Skeyhill is a fluent speaker and has the gift of telling and illustrating his various points in such a way that they become the actualities to his audience.

Last night, when explaining how the "Babylonian Finger Writes Again" he described the origin and history of civilization through ancient countries, and then pointed the reasons for their downfall.

His belief is that the present civilization is falling into decline or decay now, all over the world.

He dealt particularly with the situation in Soviet Russia, where he spent several months during the past years. He described the conditions, as he had really lived among them, and told how civilization was rapidly returning to barbarism there.

He then traced the "dry rot" through the other European countries, Canada, United States, and all over the world, pointing out that several things were the cause of this decline, namely—the mixing of the ill and unfit, economic conditions, ungodliness, and greed.
